Mother Tongues: The Disruptive Possibilities of Dalit Feminist Vernaculars

Laura Brueck
Associate Professor of South Asian Literature, Northwestern University

This talk considers the critical possibilities of the term ‘mother tongue’ (maatrabhasha) as part of Dalit feminist critiques of caste hierarchies and Dalit and non-Dalit patriarchies. It focuses on the works of Anita Bharti and Meena Kandasamy, both Dalit women authors who write in Hindi and English (and sometimes Tamil), respectively, to extend the definition of the vernacular beyond the confines of linguistic and regional specificity, allowing for a feminist reclamation of the term.

October 29
11:30am-1pm
Pane Room, Alexander Library, 126 College Ave

Sponsored by the South Asian Studies Program & AMESALL